

Employment by Industry

No single industry or sector dominates Houston employment.

Industry Share of Metro Houston Employment

Source: Texas Workforce Commission, 2016 Annual Average

- Nonfarm payroll employment in the Houston metro area averaged 3,000,600 in '16.
- Service industries account for 2.5 million Houston-area jobs or four out of five workers in the region. The largest service industries are trade, transportation, and utilities (20.3 percent of jobs), professional and business services (15.6 percent), and educational and health services (12.7 percent).
- The goods-producing sector employs more than half a million Houstonians and accounts for nearly one in five of the region's jobs. Manufacturing is the largest goods-producing industry with 7.4 percent of total jobs, followed closely by construction (7.3 percent), and upstream energy (3.0 percent).
- Two-thirds of Houston's manufacturing jobs involve the production of durable goods, items with a useful life of three years or more. In Houston, this includes items such as oil field equipment, structural steel, and computers.